Scientific Rationale

Chronic gastrointestinal diseases are common disorders among the general population often characterized by a major impact on the quality of life and prognosis of these patients. The landscape of these conditions is rapidly evolving with major impact on research and clinical practice. Being on the edge of the latest developments is a key aspect for implementing and ensuring the best delivery of care in chronic gastrointestinal disorders. The programme of the meeting covers some very novel topics in clinical and endoscopic practice and some challenging clinical scenarios, but also some very common aspects encountered during everyday clinical practice.
